Surveying

Friday surveying and recording works continues with work on a flint building in Sompting village. Despite the very dry soils, resistivity gave us some targets to work on, apart from the flint foundations which first set us off.

Early work, above, and after a couple of weeks:

We don't know what it was, but we do know that the 1936 South of England Show was held on this field.....

There are other flint structures in the field, and a couple of trenches opened to investigate.

Next dates are: August 25, September 01, 08, 22, 29.
We start at around 9:30 each Friday and finish mid-afternoon. Anyone interested in taking part in these works, even if you only want to come occasionally, let Connie know at connieshirley1@aol.com.

Visit to Mike Allen's laboratory

On 17th July members of the WAS Finds Team visited Mike Allen's laboratory, at Allen Environmental Archaeology in Wiltshire. Our main object was to learn about samples processing, in particular for our carbon samples from the recent dig at Slindon field 20. Thanks to an early start and our excellent drivers, Chris and Richard, we arrived in good time at the right place, easily recognised by the giant snail on the gateposts.

Mike gave us a tour of the facilities available in the laboratory including his impressive bespoke flotation system. This was followed by a demonstration of flotation and sieving of a land snail sample from Stonehenge. We examined samples of charcoal under a microscope, learning how the tree species could be identified, and the importance of differentiating heartwood from round wood.

We also used the microscope to look at cereal and chaff grains as Mike explained the significance of what types were found in a sample.

Mike impressed on us the importance of being clear about what we wanted to learn from our sample before collecting it, also the care that must be taken choosing and actually collecting the samples. He also explained how we could carry out our own flotations and sieving using meshes, pegs and buckets.

After a convivial lunch in the garden, it was a lovely warm and sunny day, we set off in convoy to Larkhill for a guided walk around the Stonehenge landscape. Mike told us about ongoing research excavations in the area and we were able to look into a partially backfilled trench which had turned out to be a 2m deep pit, probably Mesolithic, which bore the characteristics of a large post-hole, possibly for a totem pole type construction. The highlight of the afternoon was walking uphill along the Avenue and seeing Stonehenge appear ahead over the brow of the hill, it was pure magic.
Many thanks to Mike for such a great day and hopefully we will be doing the flotation processing of our own samples before long.

Binsted Strawberry Fayre Sunday 23rd July

The 30th Binsted Strawberry Fair was held in the special setting of a flint 19th Century threshing barn, in Binsted Lane, surrounded by the beautiful Sussex countryside. Members of Worthing Archaeological Society have regularly had a stall at this unique fair. We set up our display collection of finds dating from early Palaeolithic stone tools to Post-Medieval tiles and pottery.

We were welcomed by Mike Tristram, who lent us another gazebo to keep us dry; other stall holders lent us an umbrella and some pegs to stop our table cloth and membership forms from blowing away.

The squally English weather didn't stop us having a fine afternoon. We had many visitors to our stall who were interested in all the WAS activities in Binsted local area. We answered questions about the Roman villa site in Walberton, the pottery kilns in Binsted and the Goblestubbs sites across the A27. Some of the visitors told us about their own finds, including pieces of pottery, flint tools and a polished flint axe, which they, their parents or grandparents, had found in fields nearby.

We had a delightful time meeting so many people interested in archaeology and appreciate the help from Society members and others. See you there next year!

October 13th

Jo Seaman - 'Eastbourne Ancestors – A story of life from bones of the past'

Jo is the Heritage Officer at Eastbourne Borough Council and organised the Eastbourne Ancestors project. The aim was to identify the gender and age of each skeleton in its collection. Detailed scientific analysis of more than 300 skeletons of people who lived in the south of England thousands of years ago has undertaken by scientists and archaeologists. Testing of the bones and teeth has identified the national or regional origins, age, gender, state of health, diet, and in some cases, how they died.

November 10th

James Bromwich – 'The Garum and Salt Industry in Northern Gaul during the late Iron Age and Roman periods'

Garum is a condiment made from the fermented blood and innards of selected fish.

Being a condiment, it was something which was added to food after cooking, much as we might use soy sauce or tomato ketchup - it was the diner who used it, not the cook. James will discuss the French Garum industry and particularly that of the Atlantic coast during the Late Iron Age and Roman periods.
