SLINDON STABLEYARD 2020

The latest news is that the scaffolding which has covered the arched west wall has gone! And the Harris fence has also gone so that we can now see the small strip of the west wing which needs clearing for Bob to finish the stableyard plan. This work will continue when the weather improves in mid/late March on Saturday mornings from 9.30am to anything up to 2.00pm, depending on people's commitments.

Everyone is welcome - tea, coffee and biscuits supplied, loos on site, and use of the Finds Shed in inclement weather. Please join us.

Lecture Programme

All Lectures are held in the Gordon Room of Worthing Town Hall at 7.30pm., except for the AGM, which is at 7pm. Coffee/tea is available from 7pm.

February 11th

Dr Janet Pennington

The John Pull Memorial Lecture : An Archaeological Childhood in Sussex

Janet grew up in the post-World War II years looking at the ground – daughter of Sussex archaeologists Eric and Hilda Holden. Most of her early memories are of Sussex history, fieldwalking with her parents and observing, later taking part in, archaeological excavations all over Sussex. This talk takes us back to a more peaceful time with little traffic, no health and safety, and when every outing seemed to be tinged with excitement and history.

March 10th

AGM at 7.00pm (see flyer at end of Newsletter) followed by Lecture at 7.30pm

Richard Osgood Senior Archaeologist – Defence Infrastructure Organisation
Recovering (from) the past:

Archaeology and Operation Nightingale.

Operation Nightingale started in 2011 with the aim of assisting the recovery of military personnel post operational-tours using archaeology. Since then it has worked on sites as varied as Saxon cemeteries in Wiltshire to crashed fighter planes in Sussex. This talk will draw together many of the fieldwork results, and discuss the outcomes for volunteers and heritage.

April 12th

Mr John Mills

Archaeologist WSCC and President of Worthing Archaeological Society

Researching the life of a bridge: Old Swan Bridge and the Arun river crossing at Pulborough, ancient and modern. How do you research the history and changing life of an ordinary small local road bridge? This talk uses archaeology, topography, geology, transport and local history to study the archaeology and history of Old Swan Bridge at Pulborough, built in the 1780s. Previous bridges and river crossings on its site, from Roman Stane Street onwards, the bridge builders and rebuilders, flood and bridge authorities, and the villagers of Pulborough all come into the picture.

New Year Walk

On a chilly morning over 25 folk – with a couple of dogs - gathered at the Adur Recreation Ground Car Park, for our Annual New Year Walk. They travelled from far and wide – Southwater and Gosport, even.....

We were mostly dry.....

Thanks to Jim for his history of the Airport – a very important Airfield for the history of flying. Also to Alex for his explanation of the footbridge/former A27.

A few of us even managed to continue the walk (after lunch) around the Harbour, back past the amazing houseboats.

January Lecture – Fishbourne Wildlife Park

Professor Naomi Sykes gave her "inaugural" lecture to the Society in January. She justified this claim with the details that her enthusiasm for archaeology and thus her career was sparked when her father brought her to a WAS lecture given by Con Ainsworth. Having listened to him speaking about Fishbourne she decided to visit the site and join in the digging. She has not looked back.

Her fascination with bones was infectious as the audience sat spellbound listening to a delivery of such wide ranging and detailed knowledge regarding the dating and origin of the animal bones found at Fishbourne and other such sites.

A fallow deer jaw from the Roman period found at Fishbourne proved, by strontium 90 analysis of its teeth, that it had spent its early years in Turkey but its later developed teeth showed that the remainder of its life was spent in Sussex. A jaw dropping discovery!

A widely reported story that hit the headlines in 2019 stating that rabbits had been proven to be a Roman introduction to this country caused raised eyebrow among many archaeologists as it was assumed that rabbits were a Norman introduction. With the remains of rabbits being present in so many excavations they were never seen as a dating tool and thus ignored.

Naomi has spent her career disproving this by dating and tracking the movement of different species across the world. Her research has been further applied to chickens, pigs, dogs, cats and numerous other species thus opening a whole new study of dating and migration. A fascinating lecture.

A.S.E. Lecture January 22nd

Teresa Vieira gave a fascinating account of ASE’s excavation at the site east of Tye Lane, Walberton. The site is 12 hectares and they found 123 features in 44 trenches, ranging from the Early Neolithic to Post-Medieval. Trial trenches were dug at the beginning of 2019, and the whole of the archive is now undergoing post-excavation. Teresa has said she will come back once it’s done, to give us the full story. Finds included flint tools and debitage – evidence of knapping - bowls, including Grooved ware, and a Mesolithic/Late Bronze Age cremation in a pot.

The most significant find was a Warrior Burial of the Late Iron Age, on the far east of the site, within an enclosure. Initially the oval-shaped pit was half-sectioned. There was a complete pot inside. When the dig was extended, they found the remains of a large piece of wood, possibly a hollow tree trunk – maybe used as the base of a coffin. There were six metal bars found, which may have been strips across the top of the coffin, which was almost certainly a sealed container. There were no skeletal remains, the soil being acidic there. But there was a sword, hilt to the North, still in its scabbard, which was decorated with a copper plaque (this is currently at Fishbourne, being conserved). There was also the tip of an iron spear. Four pots from 40 – 50 AD., three of them almost complete. There were remains which were possibly of silk or leather which may have been used to wrap the sword.

There is a strong possibility that there was some connection with the North Bersted Warrior, both evidence of La Tene culture, both warriors possibly fought against the Romans. To have such a significant burial, the warrior would have been an important member of the local culture. It’s not unlikely that there’s a connection to WAS’s Blacksmith’s Corner villa. There are lots of questions to answer, for instance, when did a domestic settlement become a place of the dead?

At the NW side of the field was a T-shaped corn drier, like one excavated in Goring, of Late Roman type. There were remains of wheat, barley, spelt and oats – no corn.

There was a possible animal cemetery – containing the remains of a sheep, 2 horses and 1 cow. All disarticulated before burial – to fit the grave? There were no butchery marks. There was evidence of field boundaries from the Post-Med period.

Our thanks to James at the Museum for giving WAS the Education Room for this Lecture. (There is an Exhibition at the Novium in Chichester until September: 'Mystery Warrior. The North Bersted Man.'
